

Cargill launches poultry farming mentorship programme in Indonesia

Cargill has launched a poultry farming mentorship program that provides hands-on training to high school students. Students from SMK Agri Insani, a vocational school in Indonesia, will be the first to benefit from this 90-day program on how to develop and manage poultry farms.

As part of the program, Cargill has donated a fully-equipped teaching farm stocked with 500 chickens to the school, where Cargill experts will mentor students in modern breeding techniques. Students are also tutored in farm business management, where they learn skills such as profit and loss calculation, feed efficiency and capital management.

This program is part of a slate of projects initiated by Cargill Feed and Nutrition Indonesia that aims to support smallholder livestock farmers. Every year, the business commits one percent of annual earnings towards livestock farmer training and rural development programs to give back to the communities where it operates.

(Source: Cargill)

source: CSR Europe

05/06/2013